McGill gets injunction; throws kids onto street

The ten day occupation of the Leacock Building eighth floor lounge ended Saturday following a dizzying series of events that began Friday morning with the decision by the McGill administration to break off negotiations with the occupiers.

The administration claimed that it was discontinuing the negotiations with the day care supporters because "so far as these groups are concerned, constructive action within the bounds of reason and legality are not possible."

About 15 members of the McGill Baby Care Co-op and the Alliance for Child Care responded to the administration's action by entering the Administration Building just after noon Friday and occupying the office of Sam Kingdon, Space Allocations Committee Chairman.

The demonstrators cooperated fully with the secretaries in the fifth floor offices and allowed them to continue their work without obstruction.

About two hours after the occupation began, Kingdon entered his office and asked the occupiers to leave immediately. They refused to leave until Kingdon agreed to return to the negotiations.

Kingdon then distributed copies of the McGill press release, issued early Friday, which stated that McGill would deal only with the McGill Community Family Centre, the administration-approved day care centre which is in the planning stage.

By this time, the Administration Building was crawling with security guards, who would allow only staff members with ID cards to enter. A kind of "Check-Point Charlie" was set up at the door, barring all students from the building.

At about 3 pm, Vice-Principal Stanley Frost entered the office to inquire about what the occupiers were doing and to inform them that they had "no right" to be there.

When a Daily photographer attempted to take a picture of Frost, the Vice-Principal first moved out of range of the camera and then came right up to the photographer and grabbed his camera.

Frost asked the photographer to identify himself, and when he did Frost informed him that he also had no right to be in the office.

Frost then told the demonstrators that a message had been issued to the effect that negotiations were to resume again Monday morning at 10 am. The occupiers then jubilantly returned to the Leacock lounge with this information, ending the occupation of Kingdon's office.

At about five that afternoon, however, word came that an injunction was to be served against the MBCC, the ACC, and three individuals. The three, Roselle Furedi, Dianne Tracy, and Yvon Geoffrey, were ordered to appear in court Thursday.

The injunction, filed in Montreal Superior Court and granted by Justice Mr. Paul Gervais, named as petitioner "The Royal Institution for the Advancement of Learning, a corporation having its office and principal place of business in the City and District of Montreal." The injunction demanded that the respondents refrain from:

- "operating or participating in any manner whatsoever in the operation of a Day Care Centre or any other centre for children on any of the premises owned by the petitioners;"

- "bringing children, caring for children, or inviting or encouraging others to bring or care for children on any of the premises owned by the petitioner;"

- "keeping children or encouraging or inviting others to keep children within any of the premises owned by the petitioner (except in the case of a full-time employee of the petitioner having a private office in the said premises or building, his or her own child or children, during working hours.);

- and to "immediately remove and cause to be removed all children from the staff lounge situated on the eighth floor of the Stephen Leacock Building of McGill University.

After some deliberation, the MBCC and the ACC decided to comply with the injunction and left Saturday morning.

PC's break law

The Westmount Progressive Conservative Association is in violation of the Elections Act.

And we would never have known had it not been for an irate Chief Returning Officer.

Every candidate in the last federal election was obliged to submit something called "Form 74", giving an account of election expenses, to the CRO by January 9 of this year.

Liberal victor C.M. "Bud" Drury and NDP candidate Bob Keaton turned in their forms on time. Drury's campaign staff spent about $41,000 on the election; Keaton's spent $4200.

But the backers of Michael Meighen, the PC candidate, failed to meet the deadline and are still nowhere to be seen.

It has been estimated by people who saw some of the receipts for the campaign expenditures, that Meighen spent between $80,000 and $100,000 before his second-place finish. Meighen's elaborate campaign, engineered by McGill's won former Students' Society President, Richard Pomerantz, consisted of reams of full-colour pamphlets, posters, newspapers, matchbooks, buttons and other gimmicks. Pomerantz himself bragged, after the election, that "We spent $75,000."

Drury picked up about 23,000 votes, while Meighen and Keaton got about 10,000 and 5000 respectively.

Despite the fact that the Westmount PCs are in violation of the law for failing to declare their expenses, they have nothing to fear. It seems that there are no penalties prescribed for violations of this section of the Elections Act.

Ontario fee strike called off

GUELPH (CUP) — The Ontario Federation of Students (OFS) cancelled its fee strike at a general meeting held here over the weekend, and instead decided to hold a province-wide moratorium of classes on March 13.

Since January 1, OFS has organized a boycott of second term fee payments to protest the provincial government's imposition of a 100 dollar increase in tuition and 200 dollar increase in the ceiling on student aid loans.

The OFS executive report revealed that the fee strike failed totally at some universities and at others, such as Carleton University in Ottawa, students must soon pay their fees or be expelled. The report blamed this on the Federation's lack of adequate resources to coordinate the strike.

The OFS executive found the Ontario government "powerful and inert" and said new tactics and policies are needed to promote student interests. However, the report did not detail these new policies.

In place of the fee strike, OFS will publish a newspaper on the educational cutbacks and a leaflet outlining the reasons for cancelling the strike. OFS is requesting that its member student councils organize a one-day class boycott on March 13, and to hold seminars on the cutbacks, the recently-released Wright Committee report on post-secondary education, and why the fee strike was not successful.

The general meeting revealed a deep split between militant and conservative elements in the student organization. There was strong disagreement about the moratorium and delegates were divided in their reaction to the Wright report, with most agreeing that a stand should not be taken on the report itself but rather on legislation which may arise from it.

OFS formed a committee to investigate the possibility of unionizing students under the Labour Relations Act.

A new OFS executive was not elected because of a lack of quorum on the second day.

ERRATA

Three serious errors appeared in an article on Council on Friday, February 9. All were on page 3.

- "A councillor running for an executive position must resign as a councillor." This was not put into effect as a new electoral by-law but in fact the complete opposite. It was removed from the present by-laws.

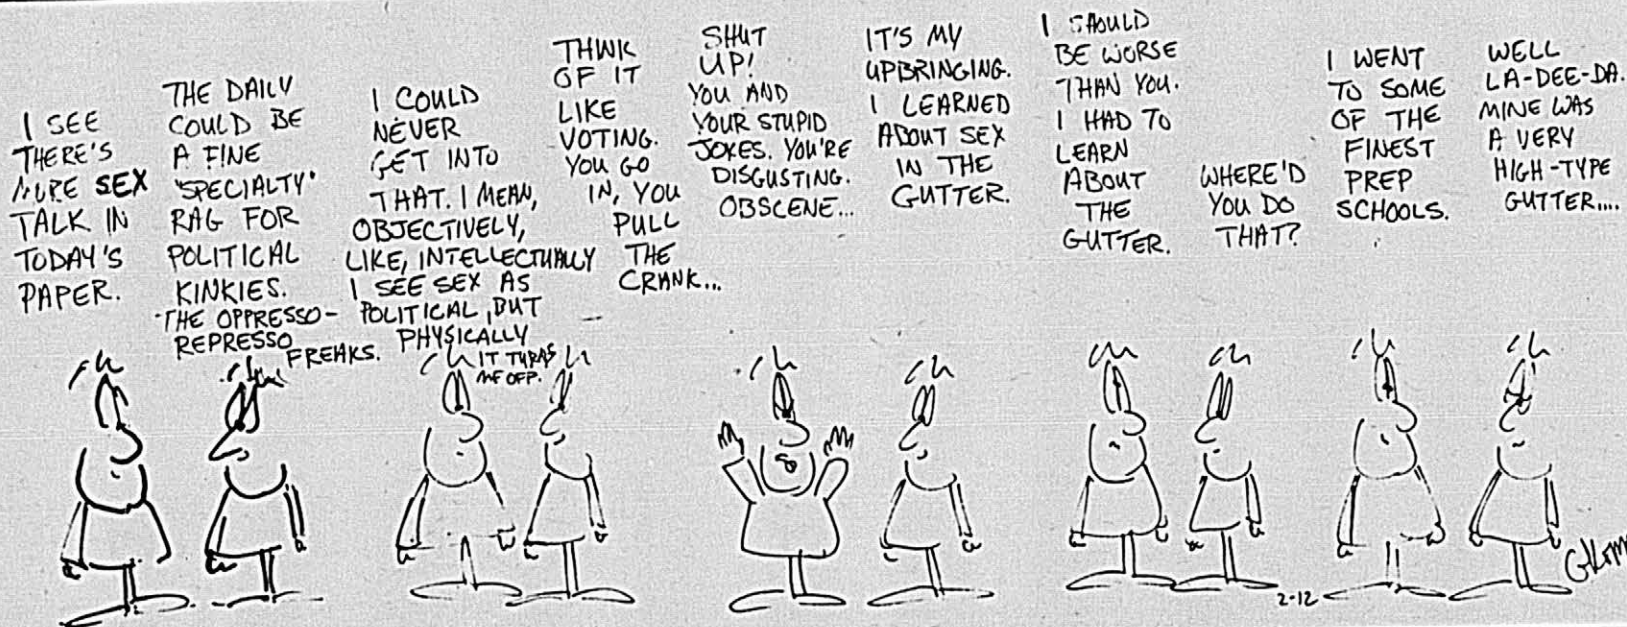

- Council did not revise the Gay McGill budget but tabled it until the next meeting.

- $2000 was voted to the Students' Society Loan Fund, not $200.

STAFF MEETING

There will be a meeting of the Daily staff today at 4 pm in the Daily office. All old and new staffers, particularly those who dropped in once and never came back, are exhorted most vehemently to attend.

APOLOGY

To all those inconvenienced by the tardiness of the 8:30 show and the subsequent cancellation of the 10:30 performance of on February 8. This was due to the error in the actual length of the film, i.e. I was told it was 2 hours, 9 minutes, and it was actually close to 25% more than that. I fully regret any inconvenience anyone suffered. To make what I hope are satisfactory amends, this film will be shown again in the next 2-3 weeks at only 75c. Thank you for your understanding and, once again, my sincere apologies for this unfortunate incident.

Sincerely,

Problems of sexual liberation

Author's note: This article deals with the question of human sexuality and is presented primarily to initiate discussion and does not pretend to provide a comprehensive analysis.

by susan wheeler

The Puritans used to punish fornicators the same way they punished murderers and thieves: a sentence in the stocks in the village square to serve as a warning to other would-be social deviates. Floggings and prison terms were common practice.

In this "Sexually liberated" twentieth century we no longer put fornicators in the stocks. We don't need to. Ideological repression is so effective that individuals are sexually self-repressive.

Birth control is still not freely and universally available and only those women with access to a few hundred dollars can obtain safe abortions. High School sex education at last admits that "sex is fun", but only in marriage. These limitations on sexual freedom are material and easily observed.

We can continue to demand free access to birth control and free abortion on demand. But even more pervasive and difficult to fight is the entire ideological fabric of our culture which perpetuates and reinforces sexual roles and stereotypes that do not coincide with reality.

The myths and fantasy ideals that permeate our culture, reflected by the media, prevent us from relating to each other as human beings by providing us with ready-made expectations of what is "normal" sexual behaviour, even when these mythical ideals are contradicted by our observation and experience.

"I met Victor in Paris last summer. We got along very well. Even though he was from Argentina, his attitude towards women seemed to be pretty healthy. At first, he was a fantastic lover, very anxious to please me, gentle and affectionate.

"But one night, he refused to engage in any pre-coital manual stimulation of my clitoris, saying that I should get over this 'hang up' of mine and learn to be satisfied by his penis alone. He then proceeded to fuck me. Angry and frustrated, I pushed him away and got out of bed. He reached out and slugged me on the side of the head. I quite literally saw stars.

"When we could finally discuss it over wine a few weeks later, he told me that my need for manual stimulation was 'abnormal' and made him feel that his penis was unnecessary for my sexual enjoyment. Then, in all seriousness, he leaned forward and said, 'You know, most of the women I've gone to bed with have had this same problem.'

"My feelings of insecurity and doubts about my own 'normality' disappeared as I choked on my wine, laughing in his face. He honestly did not see the absurdity of his statement.

"My lover's pre-determined conception of what was 'normal' was so strongly ingrained that he clung to it, even when it was contradicted by all his experience and observation." (—From an interview with a 22 year old woman.)

The myth of the passive woman, repressive and confining as it is, is in the process of being replaced by another ideal-type, the aggressive, multi-orgasmic woman. The pressure upon a woman to 'perform' is intense:

"Whenever we made love, George would do anything to please me. He probably would have tried it standing on his head if he thought that would make me have twenty orgasms.

"But his intense desire to satisfy me was really a result of his anxieties his ability to satisfy me was his way of proving his own virility, not out of any real concern for my own pleasure. And if, for some reason, I didn't reach climax, he resented me for insulting his masculinity and felt that I wasn't 'normal', something was wrong with me.

"If it was taking a long time, he would grit his teeth and whisper 'Come on! Come on! That would make me nervous and make it even more difficult to relax.

"Making love ceased to be a spontaneous expression of affection and mutual gratification. George wasn't making love to me, he was making love to his own virility." (—From an interview with a 21 year old woman)

Of course, women are not the only victims of sexual repression. Both partners suffer from the repressive ideology that permeates and distorts relationships.

Sexual repression is the total of all material and ideological inhibitions that interfere with the free expression of our human sexuality; these obstacles are both material and cultural, having their basis in the historical need of capitalism to maintain the nuclear family as the basic unit of bourgeois society.

The overwhelming effectiveness of sexual repression is demonstrated by the fact that at least one-third of all married women never or rarely experience orgasm.

Enter Masters and Johnson and the "sex doctors" who attempt to salvage the institution of marriage by eroticizing it.

The nature of sexuality

Sexual desire is a biological and individual need that seeks satisfaction. But the satisfaction of this need takes place in a social relationship between individuals. It can be a social relationship based on a money transaction, as in prostitution, not unlike the sale of a commodity. Or it can be a social relationship based on some form of emotional attachment, be it deep or superficial, whether lasting or short-lived.

Two people do not make love in a social vacuum. Each person brings into the bedroom a childhood-full of sexual fantasies and expectations, values and ideals. You may think you're alone in the king-sized waterbed, but between the two of you lies the bourgeois state and the nuclear family. You may think you're very cool and liberated, but your attitudes toward sex date back thousands of years to the origin of private property.

Because of the social context within which sexual relations take place, and the fact that the relationship itself is controlled by the material and ideological constraints of a particular social milieu, we see only one limited form of sexuality itself. We cannot begin to imagine the different nature sexuality would assume in another social environment. Because of our own cultural and material limitations, it is difficult to hypothesize about sexual liberation. We only know the appearance sexuality assumes under capitalism. All we can attempt is an analysis of this appearance. We will be better able to deal with the ideological obstacles to a healthy sexual activity if we can understand the material basis of these obstacles.

This article will attempt to trace the existing sexual mores back to their historical roots. In doing so, we can confront the obstacles that bourgeois society puts in the way of a healthy sexuality.

The role of marriage and the family

Marriage is a relatively recent development in the history of civilization. The registration and formalization of a sexual relationship that is both monogamous and lifelong has no basis in nature, either biologically, (we are all capable of an indefinite number of sexual experiences, with an indefinite number of partners) or emotionally (who can claim to feel affection for only one other human being during his or her entire lifetime?)

Marriage is a social, man-made institution, and as such, its functions can be explained in terms of social needs that arose at a specific point in history. With the first appearance of an economic surplus and the establishment of private property, monogamy was enforced so that this property could be passed down through the patriarchal family line. This practice (monogamy) was probably enforced violently at first, and then came to be an accepted form of social relationship. Through tradition, monogamy became the dominant form of social relationship and was further enforced by law and sanctified to the level of virtue by Religion. The material basis of monogamy was forgotten once it attained the ideological and cultural status it now enjoys.

The major function of marriage is childbearing. Children, as future productive members of society, are the responsibility of society as a whole. But by legally binding together the biological parents of those children, society is relieved of that responsibility. The nourishment, clothing, shelter and medical care of children are performed at the individual cost of the biological parents. The quantity and quality of the care a child receives is directly dependent upon the financial status of the parents.

Aside from the purely material care of children by their parents, the family plays an important role in the ideological formation of the child. The family is socially alienating, isolating one small group of individuals from all others. The structure of authority of the father and mother prepare the child for future submission to authority. The child is disciplined, controlled and sexually repressed. The bourgeois values of competition and individualism are fostered. Girls are taught that their ultimate goal should be marriage and a family of their own; thus, these values are passed on to the next generation.

Public education is the state's means of reinforcing the sometimes inadequate socialization performed by parents. Students are disciplined and taught to respect authority unquestioningly. They are ideologically bullied and sexually repressed.

Another social function of marriage concerns the role of the wife and mother. Primarily responsible for the care of the children, the woman also assumes the management of the household — food preparation, laundry, and the janitorial duties of cleaning the house. In general, the woman provides for all the physical needs of the children and the husband/father, freeing him to participate in social production as a member of the work force. Forced to provide these services for himself, the male worker would undoubtedly be less efficient at his job in terms of the energy and time he would be forced to spend shopping, cooking, cleaning, doing laundry, etc. In this sense, the worker's wife is also working for her husband's employer, although she is not paid for her services.

The ideological value attached to pre-marital chastity and marital fidelity is enforced by economic sanctions. The adulterous husband must pay financial penance in the form of alimony, while the wife who deserts her husband forgoes her right to financial support from him. The ideological pressure to obtain a license to engage in sexual intercourse for fear of social ostracism is intense, even in these "liberated" times. The pressure to marry is strong. The decision to marry guarantees economic advantages greater than those to be gained from just living together. There are the wedding presents and the gifts, the showers and the social approval of the couple's friends and relatives. Tax advantages are given to married couples that are denied single people.

Is it an oversimplification to explain marriage purely in terms of economics? What about love?

Love and romance, the financial backbone of the music industry, are merely mystifications of the real functions of the institution of marriage. Love, as a degree of affection that exists between individuals, may or may not exist in a given relationship. That is beside the point. Once these two individuals decide to link their class status and become partners in the accumulation of private property with the aim of raising children, their relationship takes on economic functions that link them directly to the capitalist social order.

Sexual repression

The material and ideological enforcement of sexual repression is necessary to maintain the institution of marriage. Sexual liberation is a threat to society because unfettered human needs would give rise to alternate forms of social relations that do not fulfill the demands and requirements of capitalism. If there were no economic restraints involved there would be no need to marry formally. If people choose to remain together for the rest of their lives, they obviously don't require a legal contract. The bourgeois state, by sanctifying the union of two individuals and mak-

Science Students have had it!

Sir,

The ASUS, the so-called Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, has consistently failed to recognize the needs of at least half the students it represents.

For this reason a number of science students have come together to organize a separate Science Student Society. For years we have been jammed into overcrowded classes, and nobody, including the ASUS, has said anything. Why is it that the ASUS did not protest to the administration last fall when several hundred third-year biology students were forced to walk down to the York Theatre for their classes?

Why doesn't the ASUS council publish its budget or allow reports of its meetings to be printed in the Daily? We aren't all Bennett Littles up here in the Stewart. We can understand allocations to off-campus groups, but we want to know who's getting what money and why.

And these aren't the only grievances that science students have. Why is there no co-ordination between the McGill Placement Service and representatives of the science students? Why has no-one even tried? We know what the employment situation's like out there, and we didn't slave through four or five years at McGill to end up at the tender mercies of the power-brokers in the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Why do Arts students have easy access to cafeterias in the Union, in the Arts Building and in the Redpath Library, no matter how rotten the food, when science students up at the Stewart or in the Otto Maass didn't even get vending machines until a few days ago?

We could also do with some sort of speakers program or organized tours of interest to science students. We've heard rumours; we've been given half-promises by "unauthorized" persons, but what do we concretely have? Nothing.

We've have it. We want to organize ourselves now, and represent ourselves. Even if ASUS grants us a few concessions, it will be crumbs from the table.

People in science have been bitching about this type of thing for years. But up to now nothing has been done. Either we've been ignored, or hack politicians have used our grievances as an excuse to "sock it to the commies". Well, we don't want any of this bullshit any more.

If you want to do something about the way you've been shafted by ASUS and the administration, come to the meeting TODAY at 1 pm in Union 342. We'll kick these grievances around again, and then we'll try to organize a Science Student Society, independent of ASUS. But you have to act.

Nicaragua relief campaign

Sir,

To date we have collected over $850.00 for the Nicaragua Relief Fund. A cheque will be given for that amount to the Canadian Red Cross this week. I would like to thank Linda Giles of the Debating Union, Victor Loewy of the Daily, and Tony Morgan of the I.S.A., who contributed significantly in making the campaign a success.

Most important, I wish to thank all those students who devoted some of their time to setting up tables, collecting money, and helping to spread the Nicaragua Relief Campaign around campus.

ing it difficult for them to separate, imposes restrictions upon individual freedom and ensures that the material care and socialization of the children will be provided for by individual responsibility, thus avoiding the expense of social responsibility.

Sexual liberation

Sexual liberation means that men and women would be free to enter into and to dissolve sexual relationships, unhindered by economic factors. Our relationships would be based on affection and mutual gratification, not bound by economic obligations and responsibilities.

Since sexual repression is an essential part of capitalism to maintain the nuclear family, sexual liberation requires the overthrow of such a system. The material preconditions for sexual liberation would be the economic independence of women and the collectivization of child care. These preconditions can only exist under socialism.

But what about the cultural and ideological obstacles to sexual liberation? Once the objective necessity for the family has been destroyed, and our needs are fulfilled by alternate forms of social organization, the ideological inhibitions will eventually disappear. That will take time and conscious effort, since the cultural heritage of hundreds of years will not wither away immediately.

Is there any room within capitalist society for sexual liberation? Certain groups in society are somewhat less hindered by the economic obstacles to sexual liberation than others. The student population is an example, where a limited amount of sexual freedom is allowed. All students are economically independent during the course of their studies, by means of loans, bursaries, parental support or part-time jobs. Male and female students are, more or less, economic equals in this respect. In addition, children are not usually a factor in student sexual relationships. In this sense, students enjoy a certain amount of freedom from the economic factors that control relationships in the non-student population. According to popular myth, students enjoy a greater amount of sexual freedom than the rest of the population. If this is true, we can understand that this is due to the smaller impact that economic inhibitions have in the student milieu. Even so, it is doubtful that students can claim that they are "sexually liberated". The products of the nuclear family, students operate within the ideological framework of bourgeois values. The limited amount of sexual freedom that students enjoy disappears once they leave the university environment and enter the work force. There, women become economic inferiors of men, and the economic, and cultural pressure to marry and raise a family is intense.

The most that can be hoped for within the context of bourgeois society is the recognition that sexual repression is an essential and inevitable factor of life in capitalist society. Understanding the material basis of this repression may help us to deal with these obstacles. But actually, given the nature of the society in which we live, it is idealistic to expect any real solution to the sexual problem.

Healthy sexuality in bourgeois society can best be defined as the recognition of the distorted attitudes that we have acquired from the prevailing social values, and an attempt to compensate for them in our relations with others as best we can.

The ISA has moved from an organization dominated by an ultra-conservative minority to a Third World social club. Apparently the emphasis on making the ISA a true reflection of the real situation in Africa, Asia and Latin America has been substituted with the desire to cater solely to the material comfort of foreign students on campus. This is not to say that the ISA has not made any positive achievements, e.g. the new student reception and the increasing rapport between students from various regions. Recently an attempt was made to advance the development of serious thoughts on the real issues facing our people at home and abroad by introducing the publication of a newsletter, the ISA

Forum. The attempt itself was applauded, but the issue itself was criticized for providing a narrow and untrue perspective of the Third World. In short, it is being contended that this particular issue has knowingly or unknowingly supported the aims of the enemies of the people of the world. In the light of this and other developments such as the escalation of discriminatory immigration policies, there will be a very important open meeting on Tuesday, February 13 at 4 pm in the ISA lounge (Union B40).

SUPPORT THE U DU Q STRIKE

Canucks are hot, Yanks are hotter

So there I was, sitting on the top stair of the wooden stands in the Sir Arthur Currie Gym, with pen and notebook in hand, and like, it really did my heart good. I mean, here were our very own McGill Redmen, taking on a collection of American imports called the Loyola Warriors, a team that hadn't lost a league game all year, and matching them stride for stride.

For McGill, you must understand, is not, by Canadian collegial standards, a very good basketball team. Their record, now six wins and nine losses, places them sixth in the ten-team league standings, whereas Loyola is on top. The average age of the Redmen is considerably less than that of the Warriors, and in terms of experience, I need not remind you that one of the requirements for being a normal North American growing boy is that you hightail it over to the nearest basketball court eight days a week and shoot some ball.

So why is it that if one had happened to glance up at the scoreboard-clock mid-way through the second half, he would have noticed that with 9:34 left in the game, McGill was down by a mere nine points, the score reading 55-46?

Well, for starters, there were the fans — roughly 130 strong. Without their vocal support, things might have turned out quite differently.

Then there was Loyola itself. If ever the Warriors were ready to be taken, it was on this Friday evening. Not that their vaunted offence and defence fell apart — they didn't. Rather, the word that best describes their quality of play would be "sloppy". Which is odd, because Loyola is usually very polished. One possible explanation for this sloppy play was a certain contest they engaged in last Monday, an exhibition match against Potsdam, New York's junior college team, a game which they lost by 20 points. Compared to that encounter, the McGill match looked like anything but a challenge.

For let it be understood that on this night, McGill stole the ball 12 times from their opponents. Let it also be understood that Loyola threw the ball away consistently, and may it also be made quite clear that never before this season have the Warriors been called as often for travelling, double-dribbling, and other assorted mental miscues as they were against our Redmen.

Which brings me to the whole crux of the matter. The Loyola Warriors defeated the McGill Redmen 79-64 in QUAA action last Friday night, and though Loyola was always ahead, and though the 15-point margin of victory was a sizeable one, make no mistake about it — this game was close. Let me put it another way — after bringing the first half to a close with a flourish by running off six straight points, thereby entering the locker room down by just seven (40-33), McGill received an ovation from the fans, an ovation the likes of which the Redmen have not been treated to all season long. McGill jumped, ran, leaped to the locker room; Loyola walked.

What I am trying to say is that in the final analysis the real reason for the Warriors almost losing this contest was simply that the Redmen worked like they'd never worked before, putting out 110%, playing to the very best of their ability — in short, the McGill Redmen came to win. And all the while, in the back of my mind, a certain phrase repeating over and over again: "In this our finest hour..."

But after it was all over, Loyola had won its 15th straight league game and McGill had lost again. So maybe an objective analysis is in order.

The Warriors built up early leads of 2-0, 6-2, 11-8, and 18-9; the last score existing with 12:23 left in the first half, the margin being nine points. This same margin existed, as previously mentioned, with 9:34 remaining in the game. Therefore, over a period of about 23 playing minutes, McGill matched Loyola point for point. However, with 7:25 left in the match, the score read 63-46; the Warriors had run off eight straight points — the game was out of reach. Wholesale substitutions were made on both sides and at the final buzzer, 15 points was the difference.

Who then, you might ask, was the star, or stars, for the Redmen? The answer is simple — there were none. It was, in truth, a complete team effort. Kit Kennard and Kevin Walsh handled the backboard, each pulling in six rebounds, while scoring 19 and 8 points respectively. Jeff Schimerdan and Jim Logan took care of the outside shooting, netting 8 and 6 points respectively. Joe Prah, bad leg and all, did a fine job quarterbacking as well as playing an excellent defensive game. He finished with 10 points, 3 rebounds and 3 steals. Cliff Bochner and Dave Yarock played stand-out games at guard, putting in more than their usual amount of time due to the absence of Phil Ross, out with a broken arm. Between them, they had 3 rebounds, 5 steals, 11 points, and numerous assists. Their inspired, all-out play typified the entire McGill effort. Even the three subs, Howard Drobetsky, David Kassie, and Frank Schell, looked great coming off the bench in the waning moments of the game.

But it wasn't enough, and I'll tell you why. The Loyola Warriors are a superb, talented, beautifully-trained basketball team. They are in a class by themselves, as far as Quebec college ball goes. For instance, their centre, Fred Moczulski, at 6'6", easily defeated Kennard in individual match-ups. He finished with 27 points, 6 rebounds, 2 steals, and inhibited Kit's play throughout the game. For a big man, he showed incredible mobility.

In conclusion, there were two major factors that separated Loyola from McGill in this game — Moczulski and the Warriors' passing. While everything else was going wrong, these two elements gave the edge to Loyola, and preserved their image of bending, but never breaking.

This past Friday evening, I viewed basketball that I shall never forget. I am not exaggerating when I say that it was a great, great game, both for the players and for the fans. Tomorrow, Tuesday the 13th, McGill plays again, at home, against Laval, at 8 o'clock. The Redmen will win.

And by Jove, you better be there when they do.

Ski team triumphs

The McGill ski team registered its first victory of the season last week-end, by winning a giant slalom race at Owl's Head. The over-confident winner of the previous two meets of the season, Université de Montréal, placed second. McGill is now in second place in the overall standings for the season, and is a strong contender for the Quebec University Circuit title.

Leading the women for McGill was Alice Jefferies who, with a screaming run of 1:42.0, easily captured first place. Alice, often over-shadowed by her ace teammate Debbie Davis, has proven herself to be one of the fastest racers, and she will usually be found in the top three in any event. Incidentally, Debbie, just back from a National Cup downhill race at Mont Ste-Anne, placed second with a time of 1:43.2. The other McGill woman to place was Marie Belin, who ended up ninth. Between Marie, Debbie and Alice, McGill has the most potent women's team in the circuit.

The men's competition was won by André Voizard of Laval with a time of 1 min. 34.2 secs. The top McGill skier was Brian Ward with a fifth place finish and a time of 1 min. 37.5 secs. Brian is a consistently strong skier and is frequently seen in the winner's circle. Other good performances from McGill came from Sandy Shandro, Bruce (Egon) Zimmerman, Peter Hall and Findley Sams. 11th, 12th, 13th and 15th respectively. Peter is a veteran of this same league from many years ago, and due to a vigorous training program this fall, has shown that he can still beat many of the younger skiers. Some of the Espoirs from McGill, such as Hugh Berwick, Bob Arnot, and Scott Bowness, have still failed to produce, but given a good day, any of them pose a serious threat. Bob Arnot in particular, has a rugged style comparable to that of World Cup downhiller Karl Schranz and likes to take them straight and fast.

The next race is scheduled to be a slalom at Trois Rivières on Feb. 18th, which, if consistent with last week's results, should be another victory for McGill.

"Hoops" Hoople rides again

In case you haven't deduced it by now, this article deals with intramural basketball at McGill. "Why", you might ask, "is the Daily giving space to intramural basketball when other more popular programs, like intramural tetherball, tiddlywinks, and solitaire, are ignored?" Perhaps the chairman of the basketball program, Skeezi Swish, furnished the best reply when he stated: "Because".

Though intramural basketball has been going on for some time now (this is the ninth week of an eleven-week schedule), I can honestly say that you haven't missed a thing. So by beginning this long-awaited series now the reader is missing nothing, and the novelty of my literary license will not wear off. For instance, why is it, that when I noted the presence of a nude pygmy behind me while watching the Swine play the Artichokes, I turned my back? ... bored!

By putting things into proper perspective for a moment, you must admit that the program provides an excellent opportunity for a great number of guys to work out and enjoy themselves in the process. For this reason I won't be too harsh on the atrocious quality of play. I mean, wasn't it just the other day, while viewing a Humorrhoids-Carnassials match I noted one "Hoop" Hoople, a nine-foot centre, go up for a lay-up and get laid up coming down. It seems he got his head stuck in the basket.

Now that you completely comprehend where the program stands, perhaps I should digress for a second and supply you with details. I'll begin by saying that the league is divided into three sections: the NBA, the ABA, and the OBA. No team plays another team outside his section. There are eight teams in each section; each team plays seven games. Games are always on Monday evenings in the gym.

After nine weeks of play, the frontrunners in the three sections are: 1) Med IV (6-1=12 pts.) 2) Carnassials or Dentistry (5-1=10 pts.), in the NBA; 1) Team Law (5-0=10 points.) 2) Team Psych or Grad (5-1=10 pts.) and Net Vets or Science (5-1=10 pts.), in the ABA; and 1) Eng I (6-1=12 pts.) 2) Artichokes or Medicine (5-1=10 pts.), in the OBA.

As for individual statistics, the leading scorer in the league is Dylewski with a 21.6 average for six games. He is followed by: Fraid (Law), 19; Wright (Psych), 18.7; Guiliani (Bucks) —15.6, Brown (Hobbes) —14.8, Logan (Psych) —14, Mayer (Arch), 13.6; Salvatori (Tabbies), 13.6; Aikin (Med III), 13.5; Marchant (Med IV), 13; and Weinstein (Superstars), 13.

Last week's action, or lack of it, saw Superstars defeating Hawks 41-40 in a contest that took three overtime periods to

Broomballers do it under lights

The broomball season has arrived again, and what a season it promises to be! This year there are two illuminated rinks and games are being played all day and night on lower campus. If you want a good laugh, come and see twelve grown men trying to stay on their feet. As of February 2nd, 23 games had been played and a few teams are obviously talented.

In section 1, the team to beat is the Abscesses from Medicine who have two wins against no losses. The Corporate Bums may have something to say about that. Not all the teams have played, so I may be mistaken. This section does not have any Espositos though, as in the 10 games already played only four goals were scored. But five goalies have shutouts so watch out, Ken Dryden!

In section 2, the defending champion Talbotians seem as strong as last year as they devoured Les Animaux 6-0 and the CRC's 2-0. One member of the CRC said to me: "I thought they were wearing skates." The Wackers, however, are making a bid as they have beaten the Ole Ones 2-1 and tied Les Animaux. This division is quite strong as the players don't even bother to remove their broomball shoes till the end of the season. Scoring leaders are Stein from the Talbotians, with three goals, and Langer, also of the T's, with two. Prediction: Talbotians in the championship game...

The specialty in section 3 is castrated goalies, notably the goalie from the Pink Puffers, who allowed (not of his own free will, of course) ten goals from the Raiders and Rapers to pass him. I look for the Rapers to make a clean sweep this year (get it — Broom-ball-clean sweep). They do not, however, hold down first place, as Zeke's Rinkrats and the Crushers have 2 and 0 records each. Rinkrats edged the Seals 1-0 and loosened the Sphincters 5-0. The Crushers have a 1-0 win over the Wombats and a win by default over Eng 5. Rapers seem to be stronger though. The scoring leaders are Bartlett (Rapers) 4 goals, Stelko (Rapers) 2, and Nessel (Rapers) 2. Rinkrat representative is Young with 2 goals.

In section 4, the Gee-Gees are on top with a 2-0 win over Simplex and a 2-1 win over Eng. 3. Their challengers are the Grits and Jowls with a strong showing over Epididymi 4-0. Top professional prospect is Big Al. No prediction from this intrepid reporter. Scoring leaders are La Shiazza (Grits and Jowls) with 2 and Swanson with 2.

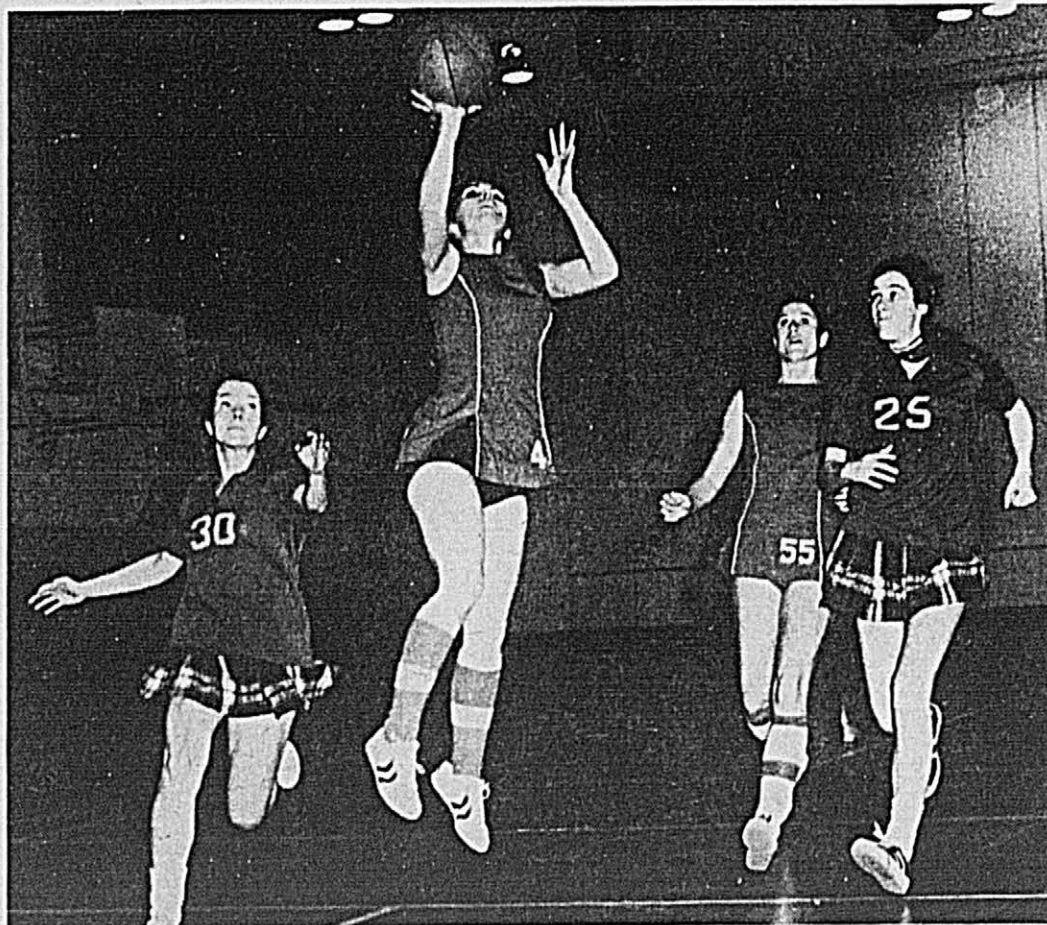

So from the smoke-filled room high above the broomball rinks, one final word of advice... Watch out for bouncing balls...

decide. Weinstein scored 18 for the winners; Campbell netted 20 for the losers. In other games, Eng I turned back Alesmen 49-30, led by Ludwig's 21 points; Med IV beat Carnassials 27-22 in a match which saw a shooting percentage of .001, Net Vets clobbered Med

III 40-39 (high men were Langer with 16 and Mauro with 15), Blues and Faust (16 pts.) triumph over Science I 32-26, Artichokes edged Swine 39-23, and Bucks toppled Eng II 41-34 in a match that could easily be termed one of team effort. Guiliani scored 28

pts. for Bucks; Pietras netted 26 for Eng II.

In leaving, I remind all you sports fans that if basketball isn't your bag, you can always sign up for indoor hunting and fishing. For information, contact Danny Garfinkle in the Union washroom.

Sir,
I lost my pen last week in the Union. I wonder if anybody saw it. It was blue about four inches tall. You can tell it's mine because I used to drop my cigarette ashes in it. I miss it a great deal as it has a great sentimental value to me, and I'd give anything (with the exception of that which a girl can't in dignity give) to get it back. Thank you very much for helping me.
